UPSIDE

Healthcare will remain the fastest growing large IT vertical with a five-year CAGR of 5.7% despite concerns that spending growth may have peaked, IDC says. Also, the Trump administration may soften the federal government's regulatory stance, which could allow healthcare firms to invest more on IT innovation rather than compliance regulations.

52% of healthcare CIOs increased their IT budgets in 2017 and 35% of budgets are unchanged, according to a Harvey Nash/KPMG CIO Survey. Many CIOs say they're struggling to define a digital strategy, and experiencing talent shortages across big data/analytics (45%), project management (36%), change management (30%) and security (29%). The net result for MSPs: Healthcare organizations need IT help across the board.

DOWNSIDE

Many MSPs lack expertise in such areas as DevOps and big data analytics — key areas where CIOs need help. Also, HIPAA privacy discussions — particularly as they relate to ransomware — remain a key opportunity. However, MSPs sometimes underestimate how much time and knowledge are required to monetize such discussions.

UPSIDE

Financial services is the No. 1 vertical for IT spending, and the banking sector will increase its spending at 4.9% CAGR from 2016 through 2020, IDC says. The Trump administration's rollback of Dodd-Frank regulations could speed the development of next-generation lending and financial systems. On the cybersecurity front, most folks are watching the New York State Department of Financial Services' (NYDFS) cybersecurity regulation, which went into effect March 1, 2017. The regulation includes multiple staggered deadlines. Each deadline could trigger a new set of IT security spending in the state. Additional states are considering similar mandates.

DOWNSIDE

FinTech startups are disrupting traditional Wall Street firms, investment houses, stock brokers and banks. And the risks are growing. Indeed, established financial institutions risk 24% revenue loss from FinTech rivals, according to a PricewaterhouseCoopers research report released in April 2017.

UPSIDE

Of the major verticals, IDC sees “stronger momentum” in the manufacturing sector. By the end of 2017, 50% of manufacturers will coordinate cloud, mobility, and advanced analytics to create more efficiencies on their shop floors, IDC predicts. Already, MSPs are starting to work with IoT-centric platforms to address manufacturing opportunities. Key offerings to watch include Cisco Jasper, GE Predix and PTC’s ThingWorx, among others.

DOWNSIDE

No doubt, the Trump administration’s efforts to restore U.S. manufacturing jobs has created investor buzz. But it’s too soon to say if or how that will impact IT spending in the sector. Also, most MSPs have yet to master big data and sensor technologies found across the IoT ecosystem.

GOVERNMENT UPSIDE

The federal government spends nearly four times as much on IT per employee than private sector organizations, according to IDC and associated FedScoop coverage: $39,177 vs. under $9,900 per employee. Also, cloud spending now represents about 8.5% of all IT spending by the federal government for fiscal year 2016, up from 5% in 2015. By 2018, 50% of federal government spending will involve cloud, IDC predicts. MSPs that can meet FIPS, FISMA, and other FedRAMP standards are ideally positioned.

GOVERNMENT DOWNSIDE

Although the federal government continues its cloud-first mantra, cybersecurity has recently emerged as the more pressing issue. And that's both an opportunity and a challenge. Many IT consulting firms await clearer direction on security from the federal government. For instance, it looks like the National Institute of Standards and Technology will be called on to audit agencies within two years. But that means NIST would take on cybersecurity audit responsibilities already reserved for the Department of Homeland Security.

EDUCATION UPSIDE

Nearly three in 10 colleges and universities suffered a cyberattack in the past year, according to University Business. That's bad news for the education sector, but good news for managed security services providers (MSSPs). Roughly 40% of university CIOs expect IT spending to increase this year, and 60% of survey participants say their colleges will expand online education programs, UB found.

EDUCATION DOWNSIDE

Universities, colleges and K-12 schools have experienced heightened layoffs in recent months. Those tight budgets aren't limited to classrooms, and many colleges are re-thinking their long-term technology plans. The shift could involve more work with so-called EdTech startups rather than traditional MSPs and technology vendors.

UPSIDE

Automation projects continue to accelerate in the legal vertical. And for good reason. The average law office makes 19 copies of each document. And that process can be costly — including $20 on labor; $250 recreating each lost document and $120 in labor searching for every misfiled document. Document management systems can drive down overall costs by 40%, Gartner says.

DOWNSIDE

Much like other vertical markets, startups with new business models are disrupting the traditional legal sector. More than 300 alternative business structures now challenge traditional law firm business models, according to Law crossing.

UPSIDE

The top three growing IT careers at nonprofit organizations involve cybersecurity pros, technology training experts and data analysis pros, according to Media Planet. By focusing on those core areas, MSPs can get a foot in the door with nonprofit organizations.

DOWNSIDE

Small, overworked management teams; underfunded projects and lack of IT direction are common within some nonprofit organizations. The top three jobs nonprofits will seek to fill in the years ahead of chief culture officer, data scientist and UX designer — three areas where MSPs often aren't particularly strong.
